

BAABUK

Baabuk slippers feel good, look good and are good for the world. They are cut from a single piece of 100 per cent pure, natural felted wool. There are no seams, and there is no scratchy feeling. Wearing them is like wearing a cocoon of comfort and warmth.

Baabuk slippers are hand-made in Nepal, using New Zealand merino. The environmentally friendly process uses three main elements: wool, water and soap. They have an anti-slip natural-latex sole, which also makes these house shoes OK for light outdoor use. (It's fine to go out and pull the washing off the line, or to grab another load of firewood.)

As a B-Corp certified company, they are hitting all of their ethical and sustainability goals and have been for 10 years. They wanted to make slippers that weren't just comfortable for people to wear, but that they were also comfortable putting out into the world. That meant trying their hardest to make them in the most responsible way possible.
